

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

April 10, 2007

I send greetings to those observing National Environmental Crime Prevention Week.

Throughout our Nation, Americans play an important role in protecting the environment and safeguarding our resources. During National Environmental Crime Prevention Week, the Environmental Protection Agency partners with communities and organizations to raise public awareness about the seriousness of environmental crime, signs of criminal activity, and the importance of reporting it to the proper authorities. My Administration remains committed to protecting our air, water, and land by pursuing innovative environmental initiatives and by continuing to enforce environmental laws and prosecute those who violate them. By working together, we can help build a more beautiful America.

I appreciate all those who work to reduce threats to public health and conserve our environment. Your efforts help make our environment cleaner, safer, and healthier.

Laura and I send our best wishes.
