Gray Literature Search Results

Gray literature is defined as the broad category of studies not found in standard, peer-reviewed literature databases (e.g., PubMed). Gray literature includes studies that are difficult to find in conventional bibliographic databases and includes references such as white papers, conference proceedings, technical reports, reference books, dissertations and information on various stakeholder websites.

The gray literature search results are currently contained in this document and in Excel spreadsheets. EPA is considering whether to manually develop EndNote citations for on topic gray literature results. This section lists abbreviated information for each citation, including a link to the reference. Full gray literature search results are presented in the Gray Literature Excel Spreadsheet: Perchloroethylene

Note: Gray Lit Results provided as a second PDF.
